

Mohamed Adam, Founder/Executive Director

Mohamed believes that in helping improve access to education. Over twenty years, Mohamed has served as an educator and leader in public education. He Co-Founded of Fenix Center for Innovative Schools (CIS) a non-profit education agency committed to collaborating with families, educators, and community partners to design and sustain innovative and high performing K-12 schools and community-based youth education programs. While at Fenix CIS, Mohamed served as the international education development director. He also consulted on numerous community development projects financed by both local and international government agencies, projects ranging in focus from education, youth empowerment, and environment. Mohamed is currently an independent school development consultant and supporting new and existing school design projects.